How a Shoemaker Came to Grief---A Correspondence of the New Orleans Picayune

We are laughing over an adventure

Paris, May, 1866,

We are laughing over an adventure into which an amorous shoemaker fell. He was not content with the one wife he had taken, but he must needs go poaching on his neighbor's bed. His neighbor's bie, annoyed by his decinrations, told her husband. The latter replied: "We will punish him." They put their heads together to devise some suitable punishment. The evening after this family consultation, the amorous shoemaker (who lived immediately opposite the house-painter, whose wife he so loved.) seeing the husband absent, called on the wife. He was in higher spirits than ever; he bought an enormous nosegay, made entirely of roses, and was as full of compliments as he could be. The wife said to him, in reply to a question: "My husband has gone to St. Germain to recover a debt of some 200f." The shoemaker was delighted at the prospect of spending the whole evening with her. Two hours flew away in most delightful conversation. He pressed her to yield; she refused. At last she said: "My greatest objection to you is the horrible odor of leather, which all shoemakers have. Take a bath in my husband's bathing tub, and perhaps, after you smell like to ther people, I will not be as obstinate as you say I am." The shoen aker hesitated. He dreaded foul play, but faint heart never won fair lady—he undressed, and was soon in the bath. He had not been in it more than five, minutes, when loud, quick knocking was heard at the door. The wife screamed "Mon dieu! There is my husband! What will become of us?" The shoe-maker was frightened out of his wits, his teeth chattered, his knees knocked together, he was utterly bewildered with fright. "Come into this wardrobe, quick!" exclaimed the wife. He obey-ed instantly. The wife opened the door, the husband entered in a towerdoor, the nusuand the threw his caping tury and violently threw his cap week exceed any known for years.

The safe in the station house at Atwater, on the Cleveland and Pittsburgh railroad, was opened by burglars on Sunday night and robbed of its contents. The station house at Lima, on the same road, was also broken open, robbed and burned. Depredations of this character have recently been quite numerous in the vicinity of Ravenna, on the Atlantic and Great Western and Cleveland and Pittsburgh roads.

When the sheemaker's wife found out all these things, she took a broom-stick and belabored her husband thoroughly. An immense crowd was assembled to Wedding Tours.

[From the Fhiladetpnia Ledger.]

Travellers and conductors are beginning to notice on the railroads a more than usual number of spring and sum-mer wedding tourists. Ready money is abundant, and to just that sort of amount that few men in these days amount that few men in these days can find any more useful or profitable investment of it than getting married. Those bachelors, old and young, who have made their fortunes within the last three years in oil or coal, or railroad stocks, or war contracts, find this a convenient season for resting a few months, taking a wife and making a marriage tour of Europe, spreading themselves in Paris, and doing the Great Exhibition, Italy, Great Britain, and the rest of the world in half a year. These tourists get out of sight of the tional and regulated simply by one consideration—the amount of money they have to spend. Jenkins arranges it all and publishes it in newspapers. But there is another far more interesting and unsophisticated class who daily catch the eye of the conductor, and are recognized by him and all old travellers on railroads and steamers at a glance—the bridegrooms and their brides who travel by themselves a few hundred miles on their tours, followed to the cars by weeping, yet happy bald-headed fathers. On all the routes leading to and from Niagara are these to be seen. They have private suites of rooms pre-engaged at all the stopping places, and have evidently the idea that they have a vidently the idea that they have evidently the idea that they are not and cannot be known as bridal tourists. This is not that they are ashamed of each other, but simply that their enjoyment is in each other's society, and they do not want to be criticised and remarked upon by profane strangers. So they lancy they are traveling incoy. And yet how easy it is to the careful eye to tell how many days, or even hours, they have been married by the very pains they take to But there is another far more inter-days, or even hours, they have been married, by the very pains they take to seem either like old married folks or ousins, as they promenade on the deck of the steamer, or sit ever so demurely

Their dress detects them in part. It is all so neat, symmetrical and new. If the parties have good taste, there is not a spark of showiness about their attire. All glitter and display are laid aside, and she who was a fashionable belle last winter, and drove out in such splendid satins and silks to her shopping, is positively more like a Quaker in a simple travelling dress of mouse or drab color. Often the young culrits pretend for a while to be playing epartee; too much softness and ten-lerness in their confidential whispers, long run, the head gravitates to the husband's supporting shoulder, and there it will hestle innocently and confidingly in the repose of a new-found faith, as well as the happiness of honest, truthful love.

Sometimes, in spite of all precautions, a tress or two of rich black hair will get loose, and fall down. But that bride's tresses are so exquisitely silky and combed and polished, that there is an order and neatness in their very disconfusion of the high and virtuous self-respect and honest pride of the maiden stepping out into a new faith. And these young folks fancy themselves lost in the crowd—unnoticed, un-known, and with the secret that they are but just married their own alone

The following is taken from Lossing's
"Life of Abraham Lincoln:"
While in Washington City, early in December, 1864, the writer called on the President, with Isaac N. Arnold, member of Congress from Chicago, one of Mr. Lincoln's most trusted personal friends. We found him alone in the room wherein the Cabinet meetings are held (in the White House), whose windows overlook the Potomac and Washington Monument. At the request of the writer, the President related the circumstances of his clandestine journey between Philadelphia and Washington. The narrative is here given substantially in his own words,
as follows:

wishington. The latitude is new words, as follows:

"I arrived in Philadelphia on the 21st. I agreed to stop over night, and on the following morning hoist the flag over Independence Hall. In the evening there was a great crowd where I received my friends, at the Continental Hotel. Mr. Judd, a warm personal friend from Chicago, sent for me to come to his room. I went, and found there Mr. Pinkerton, a skillful police detective, also from Chicago, who had been employed for some days in Baltimore, watching or searching for suspicious persons there, Pinkerton informed me that a plan had been laid for my assassination, the exact time when I expected to go through Baltimore being publicly known. He was well informed as to the plan, but did not know that the conspirators would not know that the conspirators would have pluck enough to execute it. He arged me to go right through with his to Washington that night, I didn't like that. I had made engagements to visit Harrisburg, and go from there to Baltimore, and I resolved to do so, could not believe that there was a plo could not believe that there was a plot to murder me. I made arrangements, however, with Mr. Judd for my return to Philadelphia the next night, if I should be convinced that there was danger in going through Baltimore. I told him that if I should meet at Harrisburg, as I had at other places, a delegation to go with me to the next place (then Baltimore,) I should feel safe, and go on.

"When I was making my way back to my rooms, through crowds of people, I met Frederick Seward. We went together to my room, when he told me that he had been sent, at the instance of his father and Gen. Seott, to inform me that their detectives in Baltimore had discovered a plot there to assessinate me. They knew nothing of Pinkerton's movements. I now believed such a plot to be in existence.

"The next morning I raised the flag over Independence Hall, and then went on to Harrisburg with Mr. Sumner, Major (now General) Hunter, Mr. Judd, Mr. Lamon, and others. There ner, Major how General Hunter, at.
Judd, Mr. Lamon, and others. There
I met the Legislature and people, dined, and waited until the time appointed for me to leave. In the meantime, Mr.
Judd had so secured the telegraph that no communication could pass to Baltimore and give the conspirators knowledge of a change in my plans.

"In New York some friend had given me a new beaver hat in a box, and in it had placed a soft wool hat. I had never worn one of the latter in my life.
I had this box in my room. Having informed a few friends of the secret of my movements, and the cause, I put on an old overcoat that I had with me,
and, putting the soft hat in my pocket,
I walked out of the house at a back

"We went back to Philadelphia, and found a message from Pinkerton, (who had returned to Baltimore), that the conspirators had held their final meeting that evening, and it was doubtful whether they had the nerve to attempt the execution of their purpose. I went on, however, as the arrangement had been made in a special train. We were e execution of their purpose. It, however, as the arrangement en made, in a special train. Getting and Holding Money.
On this topic of general concern, Corry O'Lanus, the Brooklyn Eagle sage, discourses with his usual lucidity and clearness as follows:
"Every man his own landlord is a capital doctrine.
"I should have adopted it myself long ago, but for want of capital.
"This is the difficulty with most tenants.
"All the real estate I own is located in a dozen flower pots, which Mrs. O'Lanus devotes to the cultivation of geraniums, verbenas, cactuses and o'her ornamental vegetables.
"The carth is a man's inheritance, but I have not come in for my share of it yet.
"Some capitalist has got the titledeeds to myestate, and won't give them up till I can raise money neglected to leave me as fortune—a habit which runs in our family.

At four the company retired to their abodes of bliss, each with a boquet of choice flowers. Several other lunch parties of this kind have taken place, but as this insugurated the series, I mention it particularly," Mesers McCare, Kraff a Co., Gentlement Allow me to add my testimony to that of others, in regard to your celebrated "Diarrhea Compound." I have been for a long time subject to the disease for which it is recommended. I have tried various remedie; but never found one that so completely endicate the disease as your medicine. A short time ago I was suffering terribly with Diarrhea I pound." I experienced immidiate relief from one dose, and ofter a third dose felt as well as ever. I regard it as an invaluable medicine, and would not be without it. Yours truly.
